

History of Delta Omega

Delta Omega is a public health honor society that was first founded in 1924 at Johns Hopkins University. There are currently over 100 chapters at Council on Education for Public Health (CEPH)-accredited schools and programs comprised of more than 200,000 members. The Delta Omega honor society officially began at East Carolina University in the spring of 2019.

Criteria for Acceptance

- Academically in the top 25% of program
- Completion of at least one full semester in the program
- Submission of short essay regarding their aspirations in public health, why they would like to be a member of this organization, and how they expect to contribute to East Carolina's Department of Public Health as an alumnus

Why Join Delta Omega at East Carolina?

This organization provides opportunity to present research at American Public Health Association meetings within the Delta Omega Section. It allows for connections among Delta Omega alumni both from East Carolina but also from other chapters. This organization also strives to aid students in professional development.
